Oil prices hit new record high

NEW YORK—U.S. crude oil prices hit a new record high on Monday as persistent concerns that rising demand will outpace global supply in a time when production is expected to decline.

The oil price peaked at $42.37 a barrel, the highest price since the 1990s, according to the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Analysts said the price increase was due to a combination of factors, including a decline in U.S. oil production and a rise in global demand.

"Given the recent increase in oil prices, it is not surprising that global oil markets are showing signs of stress," said a report from the International Energy Agency.

The report said that the world's oil production is expected to decline over the next few years, while demand is projected to rise.

The price rise has led to a surge in demand for alternative fuels, such as ethanol and biodiesel.

world growth. The Opec producer cartel, which controls half of world crude exports, has pledged to keep the global oil supply steady.

But even if Opec does not cut production, it may not be able to keep up with the rising demand.

9/11 panel: New York still unprepared

WASHINGTON—New York City still lacks the resources needed to fully respond to catastrophic attacks like those of Sept. 11, 2001, the commission investigating the attacks will be told this week by police and fire officials.

“Even one a half year after 9/11, the city still has serious gaps in the equipment and training necessary to best prevent and respond to future terrorist attacks,” Rep. Carolyn Maloney, a New York Democrat, said last week, ahead of the hearings on Tuesday and Wednesday in New York.

The commission, trying to understand what went wrong with the disaster-stricken towers in the collapsing Twin Towers, will also hear testimony suggesting police and fire departments and other city agencies have yet to formally agree on how to coordinate their response in a major crisis.

Around 345 firefighters and 33 police officers were among those killed in the suicide aircraft attacks on New York and the Pentagon, outside Washington.

More than 2,600 people died from the first year of the World Trade Center, the panel will also review dramatic footage and audio tapes of the day in 2001 when nearly 3,000 people were killed, and look into what has been done since then to prevent another attack.

“Both the subject of the hearings and the actual nature of the place—New York City and ground zero—make these some of the most gut-wrenching and heart-pounding hearings we will have on the 9/11 Commission,” Commissioner Timothy Winters said.

“We’d like to determine whether the lessons learned have been applied, and if not fully, how we can make New York another urban area prepared with the kind of coordination that is necessary in a disaster of this magnitude,” said Commissioner Richard Ben-Veniste.

Coordination among fire, police and other police, fire and other departments will come under close scrutiny during the hearings. House officials say they will tell the commission they are still not receiving enough funding to protect high skyscrapers like New York.

The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States has held 10 public hearings so far and pulled a broad range of officials, including President George W. Bush, to find out why the United States failed to prevent Sept. 11 and what steps are needed to provide better security now.

The commission is working to complete its final report by July 26.

Memories of the attacks are still fresh in the United States and especially in New York, where a huge construction site now marks the spot where two of the world’s tallest buildings crumbled in a shocking hour of terror and grief.

“We’re dealing with individuals, fire departments, who asked how they can do more for their lives in the effort to save the lives of others,” Ben-Veniste said.

“Dealing with that kind of situation, as well as the terrible circumstances faced by individuals who were trapped in the towers, means that there will be high-emotional content.”

In addition to current and former heads of the New York police, fire and emergency management departments, the commission will hear testimony from Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge, and former Mayor Rudolph W. Giuliani, who has been praised for his leadership during and after the attacks.

Staff reports prepared by commission staff for the hearing on emergency response were heavily faulted by past coalition partners and other state officials among different agencies, the New York Times reported on Friday.

The commission is also concerned that New York’s fire and police departments had still not formally agreed on how to share responsibility during a major crisis, the daily said. By Steve

Hilagan ends 6 decades of Felix rule

By Luigi Del Puerto

GUANZA (Bureau Staff) — On Sunday, after almost six decades, the grip over the town by the Felix clan — one of the most powerful political dynasties in Mindanao — ended.

New Mayor, in 405-058 majority, was proclaimed the town's new mayor in a 100% vote at the local election held in the early morning of Sunday.

The municipal board of canvassers had put up the election results, which were 40,508 votes, received over 9,000 more than the Felix clan's 30,508. This was a record for the town, because of the fact that the town's population is only 40,000.

Mayor Hilagan's victory, he himself, however, said, was due to the fact that he had a strong support from the people.

Political worries hamper bid to lure foreign investors

A RAMPING effort of the Indonesian of Filipino-Chinese. Chambers of Commerce and Industry has warned that threats of new taxes will be imposed on foreign investors will be the worst of living world community (PNA).

The official added that foreign investors, being encouraged by Indonesian officials to take a second look at Philippine investment properties were being turned off by the recent political tensions.

In a statement from Beijing, PCCI's executive vice president Frenco Chua urged both administration and opposition political leaders to put aside their differences and work together to restore the confidence of the international polity while refraining from acts of destabilization and partisan politics, which would only be to the detriment of the nation and the Filipino people.

Chua, also president of the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry Foundation, said that the present local political tensions brought by secondary institutions from opposition leaders looking to the national polls had been a disturbing experience for foreign and Filipino businessmen, who were in Taipei to attend a world conference.

"The top effects of the situation are aimed to make a grade to demonstrate to take a second look at investing in the Philippines. But we are having a hard time selling the country where we ourselves are investing," he stressed that the opposition will launch their protest against the elections. The more they know about shattering heads, the more it is not what you get," Chua said.

He said it was the crucial responsibility of the leaders of both major political parties to prevent about how they would be able to make a second look at investing in the Philippines. But we are having a hard time selling the country where we ourselves are investing,"

Clark exports up 80% in 2003

THE CLARK Special Economic Zone (SEZ) continued to post growth last year despite the international and regional challenges, including the pre-election aftermath, the US-Asia conflict and the volatile pre-election strategy.

Export pushed up economic activity in the former American military base with a reported growth rate of more than 80 percent for 2003, according to the management report recently submitted to CEC president Francisco T. Angara. The total export value of Clark companies reached $413.9 million in 2003, or about 80% percent higher than the previous year's $230 million.

Clark Free Zone Philippines Inc., (Kango Technology (Pak.) Inc., Yokohama Tele Philippines Inc., and Design Apparel International) contributed heavily to CEC's success.

The report added that the advanced exports from science-oriented enterprises also exhibited remarkable growth due to better performance of companies like Radio System and Wing-see Corp.

Angara said that the administration and procedural assistance extended by CEC to some CEC investors helped cushion the impact of the Asian financial crisis.

The number of companies extended to the location to Clark including accounts, extension of power grid, all point on the situation presented here," Angara said.

Based on the report of the legal and customs administration, the performance of CEC, the number of investors seeking investments of CEC's assistance was spilling over, an indication that most of them were operating successfully on their own. There were only 29 Clark companies which needed assistance of CEC, compared to more than 50 firms the year before.

Take the interval training challenge

IF YOU have been exercising consistently for a few months, have started to get a little bored with your workout and have noticed you aren't getting the same results that you used to, it may be time to consider "interval training."
